Luiz Felipe Amaral Calabró works in the capital markets and banking area, with an emphasis on regulatory advisory matters, transactions, and sanction proceedings. He has more than two decades of experience in matters related to the operation, regulation, and self regulation of organized markets. Throughout his professional career, he worked as in house counsel at one of the leading institutions in the Brazilian financial market, participating in significant institutional transformation processes and in the structuring and consolidation of market self regulation and supervision mechanisms. He also serves as a professor in graduate law programs.
