Mariana Tavares de Araujo practices in the areas of Antitrust and International Trade, as well as Compliance and Internal Investigations. She worked for the Brazilian Federal Government for nine years, focusing on antitrust, consumer protection, and anti-corruption policies. During that time, she represented the Brazilian government in international forums, led initiatives aimed at combating cartels, and participated in national strategies to fight corruption and money laundering. Prior to her public sector experience, she served as General Counsel for a biotechnology company in Brazil. She currently holds leadership positions in international committees related to competition law and antitrust policy, in addition to advising clients on antitrust and investigation matters.
